Shepherd of the Heart Church decided to travel to the top of Cottonwood Pass to view the fall foliage. The leaves are just beginning to turn and the views are spectacular. Toward the middle of the bus, people were reminiscing about customs practiced in their hometown churches when they were children. Tom Larsen said he remembered as a child celebrating Saint Lucia Day on December 13th in his congregation in Iowa. He said, "In Sweden, Saint Lucia Day marks the beginning of the Christmas season. One of the girls in high school was selected to wear a halo around her head with candles mounted on it. What a sight she was when they lit all the candles! Other girls would each hold a candle and follow her in procession. The candles symbolize the light of Christ come into the world."

Dorothy Hanson remembered having to learn the hymn "Jeg Er Sa Glad" in Norwegian at Christmas time. "All the kids learned it in Sunday school", she said. "It was so much fun to learn a foreign language." Before we knew it, Dorothy was standing in the aisle with her hands in the air singing: Jeg er sa glad hver julekveld, ti da blev Jesus fodt; da lyste stjernen som en sol, og engler sang sa sodt. Her husband said, "Sit down Dorothy, you're making a fool of yourself!" She replied, "Get up here you old goat! Let's sing it in English!" Soon, they were both standing and leading the whole bus: I am so glad each Christmas Eve, the night of Jesus' birth! Then like the sun the star shone forth, and angels sang on earth.

Gertrude Guttenheimer could no longer contain herself. She jumped up and began singing in German her favorite song: Stille Nacht, heilige Nacht! Alles schlaft, einsam wacht nur das traute, hochheilige Paar. Holder Knabe im lokkegen Haar, scholaf in himmlischer Ruh, schlaf in himmlischer Ruh. When she concluded, everyone continued singing in English: Silent night, holy night! All is calm, all is bright. Round yon virgin mother and child. Holy Infant, so tender and mild, sleep in heavenly peace, sleep in heavenly peace. The bus became silent as people were absorbed in warm thoughts of childhood memories.

Yasua ibn Yusuf al Nijjar was from Palestine. He had met people from Shepherd of the Heart Church when they were visiting a Christian Church in Palestine a couple of years ago. Now he was visiting the United States and staying with Josef and Magdalena Carpenter who were serving on the SOTH's Mission Team. He was taught by Christian missionaries and spoke very good English. He stood and addressed the people, "I send greetings and peace from my Arabian brothers and sisters in Palestine. Thank you for the prayers and support you have given us over the years. I remind you that 'Abraham is the father through faith of Jews, Christians and Muslims. Centuries later, Jesus Christ, the Word of God made flesh, came into the world. His followers led the movement that became universal Christianity. The arrival of the Holy Spirit at Pentecost was witnessed by Arabs and Middle Easterners along with others during the Roman Empire in multi-ethnic Palestine.' As I listen to your Christmas hymns sung in Norwegian and German, I am reminded that our church is universal and in every country of the world." Then, Yasua sang his favorite Christmas carol, "I Love You, Manger Child," in Arabic. What a beautiful tenor voice he had! Pastor Henry thanked him for the beautiful song and his greetings from our brothers and sisters in Palestine. When Yasua sat down, Elmer 'two-step' Inkfest, the choir director, went over and asked Yasua if he would consider joining the Church choir.

Suddenly, Powered By Grace's engine roared as it neared the top of Cottonwood Pass. Hubert Lautenschlager, Chairperson of the Council announced, "We are reaching the Continental Divide. You don't get much higher than this!" The view was breathtaking! Mountains were covered with colorful trees as far as the eye could see. Powered By Grace pulled over and parked. Everyone left the bus to get a better view. Some of the children began running up a path that went to the very tip of the Divide. Others followed them eager to see more of this beautiful scenery. The path was steep and the air was thin at 12,000 feet. Even youth began to lose their breath and slow down. Soon, everyone was standing at the top of the Divide. "Wow!" Hubert said, "You can see forever up here! I feel so close to God!" Jokingly, he quoted the Mount of Transfiguration passage, 'Let's build three booths, one for Jesus, Moses and Elijah!' Matthew 17:4 "It would be nice if we could stay on the mountain tops," he said, "but, eventually we must descend into the unknown challenges in the valleys of life."

"Stretching our boundaries and having a broad vision like this are important to the church's spiritual life too." Henry said. "That's why we profess faith in 'one, holy, catholic, and apostolic church' when we proclaim the Nicene Creed." Ole spoke up and said, "But Pastor, ve aren't catolik. I don't tink much of sayin dat ve believe in da catolik church." Ole wasn't sure about much, but one thing he knew was his commitment to the freedom he found in his the Gospel.

Gertrude Guttenheimer suggested rather than saying "catholic", we should say "Christian". Pastor pointed out that 'one, holy, catholic and apostolic' are important characteristics of our Christian faith, which is why they were included when the Nicene Creed was formulated in 325 AD and embraced by the Reformers of the sixteenth century. Pastor reminded Gertrude that catholic had a small 'c' and was a Greek word meaning universal.

Pastor continued, "Yasua reminds us just how big our church is. The term 'catholic' is much larger than any one church including the Roman Catholic Church. Recently, the Pope issued a statement indicating that only the Roman Catholic Church can claim to be a Church in the true sense of the term. This narrow understanding indicates that what the Pope considers to be a "proper church" is much more Roman, than it is Catholic. The catholic church does not exist in any one Christian body. Rather, together we all make up the catholic (universal) church."

Hubert said, "Religion seems to be involved in lots of problems these days. It seems that Arabs and Jews have been fighting each other forever. And, on September 11, 2001, religious-inspired violence reached the shores of the United States. What about radical Islam? When we confess in a universal church, does that mean the God we believe in is the same one true God over everyone?" "Yes", Henry said, "But the Inquisition, Crusades and radical Christian fundamentalism remind us that Christianity has it's problems too. Religion can contribute to tribalism, animosity, and, under the right circumstances, violence. Whenever a religious group says, 'We have all of God's truth', it begins to cast an ugly shadow and risks becoming more of a hindrance than a help to society. To say, 'We have all of God's truth' is not far from saying, 'We are God'. The people who incited Jesus' crucifixion believed they had all of God's truth and refused to allow their understanding to be expanded. Believing the church to be catholic or universal reminds us to remove our blinders and see the vastness of what God has done in Christ."

Hubert said, "Isn't our understanding of God's grace similar to our understanding of catholic?" "Amen," Pastor replied. "We should never place a period, where God has put a comma."
